VANISHING TREASURES BY KATHERINE RUNDSELL

Katherine Rundell's Vanishing Treasures: A Bestiary of Extraordinary Endangered Creatures is a book that generates awareness in a hope to evoke change. Hillary Rosner says, "In 22 bite-sized odes to an assortment of creatures, Rundell describes our planet's living cabinet of curiosities, a gorgeous assortment of wondrous animals deserving of our awe, respect, and solidarity. Through literary references and tidbits of history alongside descriptions of dazzling biology, Rundell conjures a parade of swimming, crawling, flapping, lumbering life. Each tribute is also a plea, and the book as a whole is a solicitation: It's past time for us to truly see these beings, recognize their majesty, and step up, finally, to protect them."

SOUND BATHING

Join us for a transformative evening of meditation and sound bathing led by Ellie and Matthew Shrader of Shrader Healing. In the garden's great hall, we'll gather for a deeply restorative experience where you'll be guided through a meditation designed to help you reconnect with your body. Then, settle into a state of relaxation as you're "bathed" in healing sounds from gongs, crystal bowls, shruvi boxes, flutes, drums, and more. This meditative sound bath creates a soothing, immersive environment that promotes relaxation, mental clarity, and a sense of wellbeing.

A sound bath is a meditative experience where attendees are "bathed" in sound waves. These waves are produced by a variety of healing instruments. This type of meditation doesn't always have a catchy melody or rhythm one would associate with going to a concert, but instead is a carefully selected wash of instrument and voice with notable resonance and overtones. During the sound meditation, participants lie on their backs—sometimes referred to as the Savasana position in yoga—for the entire experience as Ellie and Matthew weave together sounds which bathe participants as they tune the mind for healing.

Bring whatever you need to get comfortable—yoga mat, blanket, pillow, or eye mask—and let the sound guide you into a state of deep calm. Participants often report feeling deeply relaxed and rejuvenated after the session. Please arrive 15 minutes early to settle in, and please avoid wearing fragrances to ensure a comfortable space for all.
